RESULTS AND DISCUSSION

In this analysis, we delve into the realm of affective meaning present in the Jakarta Post daily articles. Affective meaning refers to the emotional content and implications conveyed through language, providing insights into the sentiments and attitudes expressed within the text [76], [77], [78]. By examining this aspect, we gain a deeper understanding of the underlying emotions, biases, and perspectives prevalent in the articles published by this renowned Indonesian newspaper [79], [80].

One striking feature of affective meaning in Jakarta Post articles is the wide range of emotions portrayed [81], [82], [83]. The writers adeptly convey joy, sadness, anger, fear, and other sentiments, effectively engaging readers on an emotional level. Through carefully chosen words and vivid descriptions, they create a tapestry of emotions that resonate with the readers, drawing them into the core of the stories [84], [85]. These emotional undercurrents not only enhance the overall reading experience but also play a crucial role in shaping readers' perceptions and interpretations.

Furthermore, affective meaning in the Jakarta Post articles offers valuable insights into the prevailing social and political climate in Indonesia [86], [87], [88]. By examining the emotional tone of the articles, we can discern the prevailing attitudes, biases, and ideologies within the society [89], [90]. For instance, articles featuring themes of social justice may evoke empathy, concern, or outrage, revealing the newspaper's stance on these issues. Similarly, political articles may invoke frustration, hope, or disillusionment, reflecting the prevailing sentiments surrounding the country's governance [91], [92].

It is important to note that affective meaning can also shed light on the nuances and complexities of the subjects discussed in the articles [93], [94], [95]. By analyzing the emotional language used, we can uncover underlying assumptions, values, and cultural contexts that shape the narratives [96], [97], [98]. This aspect is particularly crucial in understanding how the Jakarta Post frames certain topics and events, as well as how they resonate with their audience. Additionally, affective meaning can also be influenced by the linguistic style employed by the writers [99], [100]. The use of rhetorical devices, such as metaphors, similes, and vivid imagery, contributes to the emotional impact of the articles. These stylistic choices can elicit strong emotional responses and create a lasting impression on readers. Moreover, the tone of the articles, whether it be formal, conversational, or confrontational, further influences the affective meaning conveyed.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, the analysis of affective meaning in Jakarta Post daily articles provides valuable insights into the emotional content, societal attitudes, and cultural nuances present within the newspaper's publications. By exploring the range of emotions expressed, we gain a deeper understanding of the perspectives, biases, and ideologies that shape the narratives. This analysis allows us to appreciate the power of language in evoking emotional responses, enhancing reader engagement, and ultimately shaping public discourse.
